

THE PEOPLE'S CODE - FAQ + OBJECTION HANDLING

Justice, Logic, and Transparency Without the Loopholes

Q: Isn't this just another bureaucratic mess waiting to happen?

A: Actually, it's the opposite. The People's Code reduces bureaucracy by removing redundancy, forcing clear language, and creating central oversight. No more mystery verdicts. No more secret evidence. The system becomes transparent, not tangled.

Q: Won't judges and prosecutors resist giving up power?

A: Some might. That's why we built it with public scoring, mandatory disclosure, and public oversight. When your ruling is visible to the public and tied to measurable outcomes, behavior changes. We're not removing power—we're holding it accountable.

Q: Isn't this too expensive to pull off nationally?

A: Not with the 20/30 Tax Plan already funding it. The $25B needed annually is offset by cuts to retrials, prison overhead, and audit costs. The result? A more honest system that costs less over time.

Q: What if a jury still makes a bad call—even with summary sheets?

A: They might. But now we'll know why. That visibility lets us study patterns, retrain processes, and detect bias. Today's system lets mistakes hide in silence. Ours demands documentation—and correction.

Q: What prevents the Civic Oversight Panel from becoming politicized?

A: Rotation. Transparency. Diverse backgrounds. Public voting records. Logic scoring keeps outcomes grounded in function, not ideology.

Q: Isn't transparency risky for legal outcomes?

A: It's risky only for those relying on secrecy. Evidence is shared post-trial, with redactions as needed. Verdicts and sentences must hold up to scrutiny. That's not risky—that's justice.

Q: Won't this system be abused like every other one?

A: The difference here is structure. Abuse is harder when everyone sees your math. Every major legal step—from charges to rulings—is visible, explainable, and tied to known metrics.

Q: Why should I trust any system to get this right?

A: You shouldn't trust the system. You should trust the structure. That's the Public Logic model. Don't believe us—believe the inputs. The outcomes. The receipts. The People's Code is designed to show its work.

Q: What's in it for the average person?

A: - You know what's legal and why - You get the same rights in every state - You can look up verdicts, sentencing, and case patterns - You don't need to be rich to defend yourself - You can serve on a jury and actually get paid

Q: What's the catch?

A: The catch is that it only works if we choose to make it real. The logic's here. The funding's here. The structure's here. All it needs is the public to say: "Yes. This is the justice system we meant to build."
